Why there has been no Forward Movement from Washington.

An occasional correspondent of the Cleveand Herald (Republian) does not present very flattering view of the prospects of a forward movement from the Potomac. He thus presents his own impressions, from what he saw and heard at the Federal Cap-

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.

To the Editors of the Herald: I have been spending a few weeks in the political metropolis, and have found things generally so different from what I was taught daily by the telegraph to expect, before leaving home, that I cannot resist the inclination to jot down a few of my impressions for your perusal. You know how long and how anxiously we have looked day by day for a collision between the two Grand Armies on the other side of the Potomac. A man can not spend a week in Washington without becoming convinced that the telegraph is the bearer of more lies, and the cause of more false impressions than any other vehicle of thought in the nation-the press not excepted. Not one-half the stories which it daily flashes through the country are true. I do not believe there has ever been a time since Gen. McClellan assumed command of the Army, that he contemplated an onward movement. It is obvious, to a careful observer of the condition of affairs, that such a movement would only prove a re-production of the disaster at Bul Run. The great error was in permitting the enemy to occupy Manassas. They have made it a perfect Gibraltar. Every day, since its first occupancy by them, the difficulties of its capture have increased, until now it would be the hight of madness for our army to expect to take it by any direct attack. A flank movement, by which we could march behind the present strong fortifications, would be our only hope of suc-

The question is asked, why has not such movement been made? I will tell you:-In the first place, the armies have been about equal in numbers, but that of the enemy have had a year the start in preparation, and their fortifications are of the strongest kind. Both armies occupy field works and each has been waiting for the other to make the attack, equally confident that the one which did so would be defeated. In the mentime, the country occupied by them has been completely desolated, the crops have been absorbed, homes have been pillaged and burned, fences destroyed, so that within one hundred miles, in every direction, that which before the war was a fine farming district now does not contain forage sufficient to supply a single division of the great army of the Potomac: the roads are in the worst possible condition, hardly passable for army wagons, much less for artillery. The forests have been leveled in every direction, and very much of the country between this city and the enemy would present to an army marching in line miles upon miles of territory, wholly impassable on account of fallen timber. Surely, these reasons are sufficient to account for delay, and if, in the face of these obstacles, efforts had been made to remove them at all commensurate with their magnitude, I think the people would have little cause to complain. But while this has been the case, our toops have been employed in erecting unnecessary field works and attending magnificent reviews. No road has been improved, no forest removed, nothing done to facilitate a grand movement. I do not know where the fault lies. The army has laid still upon the green hills of the Potomac, feeding upon the substance of the nation: and now tho prospect of its enagaging the enemy is further off than ever. We are told daily that it will not go into winter quarters. Mr. Chase said so in New York a few days ago, but I confess I can not see any other alternative, for it cannot with any propriety, in the present state of the country, make a march against the enemy. I have no doubt-there can be no doubtif the proper means had been employed. that we might to-day have been in posses sion of Richmond as well as Port Royal. There is a screw loose somewhere. I may be laughed at for attempting to comprehend this subject; but while I do not pretend to point out a remedy, I am perfectly satisfied, as is every other observer with whom I have conversed, that there is incapacity in some of the powers that control the movements of the army.

The Yankees on Green River. A number of the 31st Indiana Regiment, writing from Calhoun, Ky., to the Indianapolis Journal says: The dam in the river here was formerly called Vienna Falls, and the hill on which we are encamped was the site of the old fort of the same name. The spot on which mess No. 4 of Company K cooks, is sheltered by a large oak tree, the same which sheltered the camp fire of the Indians of Daniel Boone and the two Miss Calloways as prisoners. Here they were retaken by the father, the hardy and noble old pioneer. So you such a settlement will be difficult; but, will see we are on ground that is revered meantime, success in warlike operations by all true patriots of all sections of the will give the North a broader basis and a county, and we are fully prepared to defend it to the last; or if our leaders think it best, to leave it for other parts of the State to drive the rebels back, or exterminate them. On the 27th a bridge built of barges was thrown across the river at this place, connecting us with Rumsey, which is immediately opposite. When completed it will insure a speedy passage to the pus, the infringement of the liberty of the connecting us with Rumsey, which is opposite bank, should any emergency re- press, confiscations and proscrisptionsquire it. There is now, I believe, ten or these stand between and break the shining I twelve cannon with the regiment.

Bennett on Forney.

The New York Herald is a little sarcastic in its notice of the Forney-Prentice dinner. . The following is a sample:

The Chevalier Forney, taking his cue from the immortal George Sanders (secesh.) has adopted the practice of giving political dinners and suppers. If Sanders wished to overthrow Louis Napoleon, or to nominate a President or elect one, his grand coup 'd etat was a luxurious supper to a mixed company of hungry politicians. When the wine was in, the wit came out, and Sanders ruled the roast, as a veritable Warwick, the King Maker. Forney, an old apprentice of Sanders, has set up in this business for himself. His last experiment was a petit souper, at which he made a Damon of Secretary Cameron and a Pythias of Prentice, the bon vivant of the Louisville Journal. It was a great success. Gen. Cameron pronounced Prentice the savior of Kentucky, and Prentice pronounced Cameron the identical man to carry us through this war in a blaze of glory. But while each of these well pleased men was yet walking in the lavender of this love feast, lo! and behold! the Louisville Journal pounces upon Cameron as a heretic, and demands that he be carted off to the guillotine. Prentice, like Greeley after the battle of Bull Run, has to come out and declare that he does not control his own paper; and so the good work of Forney's oysters and wine is spoiled, Forney will have to try it again, and let Greeley be present next time, so that Prentice may keep his wits about him.

The Question at Issue.

The following significant paragraph is from a Port Royal letter in a New York paper. It plainly indicates the object of the Yankees in waging the war against the South: "We will soon have peace. It is no longer a question of whether the South can 'maintain its independence'-that wrethed cant phrase of their vile demagogues. It is simply a question whether the deluded and unhappy population will make peace before slavery is destroyed and they are destroyed by their slaves. "When the slaves rise they will leave an appalling desolation-burned houses. innocent families murdered, plantations sacked, everything utterly destroyed and wasted, and then gaunt famine and starvation among them. We cannot avert this-it belongs to the operations of natural causes; it is the retribution that sooner or later overtakes the wicked." The Louisville Journal Still After

Cameron. [From the Louisville Johnnal of the 3d.]

We find the following in one of the Wash ington dispatches of the 1st instant: "The entire article reprehensive of Cameron's speech was sent by some person without the knowledge of Prentice.' This statement refers to the remarks in the Journal of the 22d ult., on the opinion concerning slavery which Secretary Cameron expressed at a public dinner given by Col. Forney to Mr. Prentice. It is hardly necessary to say that the statement is a ridiculous falsehood. The article in question, though of course prepared without the privity of Mr. Prentice, was written by one authorized to write it, and, what is more, it expresses faithfully the unalterable views of the loyal men of Kentucky. It anybody at Washington or elsewhere fancies that the Louisville Journal can be moved to abandon these views and to advocate or palliate the opposite views, he is strangely mistaken. The article which the wiseacre of the telegraph undertakes to dispose of so cavalierly expresses the views of the Louisville Journal as well as of the loyal men of Kentucky.

Russell's Last Letter to the London Times .- The Cabinet --- European

This fact might as well be understood first

Russell's last letter in the London Times, dated the 13th of November, contains the following paragraph: THE CABINET AND FOREIGN POWERS.

Intervention.

There are anxious, if not distracted, councils in the Cabinet. The attitude of foreign powers is regarded with apprehension; but so thoroughly determined is the Northern spirit in prosecuting this war, that I sincerely believe the men and money of the States would be expended to the last to resist intervention by force. It is, however, not the less certain that the President and his Cabinet are not indisposed to a peaceful arbitration; and, from what I hear, it is not unlikely that at this moment the propriety of accepting or asking for the intervention of a great European potentate may be under consideration. The condition of more commanding attitude. All the world sighs for such a peace as may secure a continuance of friendly relations and prosperity to both sections. May it come quod felix faust umque sit. But, come as it may, or how it may, the arbitrament can never reunite the fragments of the shattered mirror in which the goddess of American libsurface.
